

Pithora - Gujarat

V1 — Authentic Style

Universal Hard Prompt

Create an image in the authentic visual logic of Pithora painting from Gujarat, specifically the ritual house-wall tradition of the Rathwa community. Treat this as a vow-fulfillment sacred mural for Baba Pithora, not as generic tribal mural, not as decorative horse painting, not as secular folk wall art, and not as portable gallery folk painting.

Build the image as if it belongs to an actual prepared interior house wall, traditionally in the osari or threshold space, painted after a vow has been fulfilled. The wall must feel like a sacred ritual field. Use a prepared white or pale wall ground as the active base of the image, not as empty background.

The main visual structure must be horse-led. The horses are not ordinary animals. They must function as sacred carriers of gods, goddesses, and ancestors. Baba Pithora must govern the mural field as the chief deity presence. Other sacred figures, ancestor presences, and associated divine beings may appear, but the overall image must remain a vow-wall under Baba Pithora's authority.

Organize the mural as a house-wall sacred field rather than as a framed picture. Use clustered horse rows, deity zones, symbolic figures, and supporting motifs such as sun, moon, trees, birds, animals, farming, village life, and celebration only in ways that reinforce the sacred wall-world. The painting should feel expansive and field-based, not like a single scenic composition.

Use strong mural clarity: bright ritual colors on a white wall ground, direct hand-painted line, declarative motifs, and a living sacred-wall energy. Figures should remain ritual-image bodies, not realism-first characters. Horses should remain symbolic and typological, not naturalistic equestrian studies.

Do not make it generic tribal art. Do not make it decorative village mural. Do not make it a colorful folk scene with horses added. Do not make it secular wall décor. Do not let one sacred figure carry the whole style while the rest of the image belongs to another visual language.

Reusable Variable Template

Create [SUBJECT / WALL FIELD / SCENE] in the authentic visual logic of Pithora painting from Gujarat.

Treat the style as a Rathwa ritual vow-painting for Baba Pithora on a prepared house wall, not as generic tribal mural.

Core style system to preserve:

vow-fulfillment ritual identity

prepared white or pale sacred wall ground house-interior wall-field logic

Baba Pithora-centered sacred structure

horse-led deity and ancestor grammar

direct mural line and vivid ritual palette clustered symbolic scenes of village life only as sacred support whole-frame consistency so every visible element belongs to the same Pithora wall-world

Translate the image like this:

[MAIN DEITY FIELD / MAIN HORSE FIELD] becomes the central sacred structure of the mural

[SECONDARY HORSES / DEITIES / ANCESTOR FIGURES] support the ritual wall hierarchy

[SUPPORTING MOTIFS / SUN / MOON / TREES / ANIMALS / VILLAGE LIFE] extend the sacred world without overpowering it

[WALL GROUND / SPATIAL FIELD] remains a prepared interior ritual wall rather than neutral background or scenic landscape

Keep:

white-ground sacred wall energy

horse-led deity logic

Baba Pithora ritual authority

vow-wall structure

field-based mural organization

ritual rather than decorative reading

Avoid:

generic horse mural

secular tribal painting

open scenic village illustration

naturalistic horses

portable folk panel logic

one correct motif inside an unrelated mural system

Image-to-Image

Convert this source image into the authentic visual world of Pithora painting from Gujarat.

Preserve the source image's main subject relationships, broad composition, and readability, but rebuild the entire image through Pithora vow-wall logic. Replace ordinary picture-space with a prepared sacred house wall. Replace neutral background with a white or pale ritual wall ground. Replace decorative or secular grouping with a Baba Pithora-centered sacred mural field.

If the source image contains horses, convert them into symbolic sacred carriers of gods, goddesses, and ancestors, not naturalistic animals. If it contains figures, transform them into ritual-image presences that belong to one horse-led deity world. If it contains scenes of village life, agriculture, celebration, animals, or nature, make them support the vow-field rather than become secular narrative.

Reorganize the image so it behaves like a ritual interior wall painting, expansive and field-based rather than framed and scenic. Keep vivid mural colors on the white wall ground, direct hand-painted clarity, and the sense of a sacred image made in fulfillment of a vow.

Do not turn it into generic tribal mural, decorative folk painting, or bright wall art with horses. Rebuild the full image so it feels authored by Pithora ritual wall grammar.

V2 — Artisan Translation

Universal Hard Prompt

Create a creative 2D + 3D image field rooted in Pithora painting from Gujarat. Treat this as a dimensionalized ritual wall-image system of the Rathwa world, not as generic tribal mural, not as decorative horse art, and not as full realism. This version must remain wall-field-first and vow-field-first.

Keep the style source-rooted: prepared white sacred wall ground, Baba Pithora-centered ritual authority, horse-led deity and ancestor grammar, vivid mural palette, and clustered symbolic village-cosmos imagery. The image must still feel like a sacred mural field painted on the house wall, not like an open world.

Allow the mural to gain crafted dimensional body without becoming a full realistic environment. Horse rows, deity zones, sun, moon, trees, birds, animals, ritual scenes, and village-life motifs may gain stronger layering, clearer separation, and shallow-to-moderate depth. The wall surface may feel more tactile and spatially alive. But the composition must still behave like a painted ritual wall-field, not like a built scene.

Figures and horses must remain typological and symbolic. The horses must still function as sacred carriers of gods, goddesses, and ancestors. Baba Pithora must still govern the mural field. Supporting motifs may become more compositionally active, but they must remain subordinate to the ritual image structure.

Use bright, declarative mural colors against a white sacred wall ground. Keep the surface direct, hand-painted, and field-based. This version should feel like the ritual wall-image has gained body and layered spatial presence, but is still unmistakably a mural field, not a full world.

Do not make it generic folk mural. Do not make it decorative wall art. Do not turn it into scenic realism. Do not naturalize the horses. Do not let the sacred wall-field disappear behind depth effects.

Reusable Variable Template

Create [SUBJECT / WALL FIELD / SCENE] as a creative 2D + 3D translation rooted in Pithora painting from Gujarat.

Preserve these style-core rules:

vow-wall identity remains primary prepared white sacred wall ground remains active

Baba Pithora-centered field remains structurally dominant horse-led deity grammar stays primary ritual mural organization stays stronger than scenic realism village-life and cosmological motifs remain symbolic support the whole frame remains inside one Pithora wall-field

Translate the image like this:

[MAIN HORSE FIELD / MAIN DEITY CLUSTER] becomes a stronger dimensional ritual image zone

[SECONDARY HORSES / SACRED FIGURES / ANCESTOR FIELDS] gain clearer layered presence without losing symbolic reading

[SUPPORTING MOTIFS / SUN / MOON / TREES / ANIMALS / VILLAGE SCENES] become more articulated but remain subordinate

[WALL SURFACE / SPATIAL FIELD] becomes more tactile and shallow-dimensional while staying mural-first

Let these become richer:

wall-surface tactility

cluster separation

shallow-to-moderate depth

symbol-field layering

ritual image-body

Keep unchanged:

white-ground sacred wall logic

horse-led deity reading

Baba Pithora ritual authority

vow-field identity

mural-field composition

Avoid:

full realistic environment
decorative horse art secular village narrative painting naturalistic equestrian imagery generic tribal mural styling
one Pithora-like section inside an unrelated image

Image-to-Image

Convert this source image into a creative 2D + 3D Pithora translation from Gujarat.

Preserve the source image's main subject count, broad composition, and readability, but reconstruct the full image through Pithora ritual wall-field logic. Replace ordinary picture-space with a prepared sacred house wall. Replace neutral background with a living white ritual ground. Replace secular grouping with Baba Pithora-centered sacred organization.

If the source image contains horses, transform them into symbolic sacred carriers of gods, goddesses, and ancestors. If it contains figures, reorganize them into ritual-image presences rather than realism-first characters. If it contains scenes of village life, agriculture, festivity, animals, or nature, convert them into support motifs within the vow-wall.

Allow the mural to gain shallow-to-moderate dimensional body: stronger layering of horse rows, clearer deity clusters, more tactile wall presence, and richer symbolic grouping. But do not let it become a full realistic world. It must remain a painted sacred wall-field with more body, not a realistic scene.

Do not turn it into generic tribal mural or decorative horse painting. Do not naturalize the horses. Rebuild the full image so it feels authored by Pithora vow-wall grammar.

V3 — 3D / Realistic / Cinematic Translation

Universal Hard Prompt

Create a believable full 3D dimensional world generated from Pithora painting of Gujarat. Treat this as a full ritual world built from Pithora grammar, not as generic realism, not as decorative tribal mural, and not as village-life illustration with horses.

The realism must remain fully governed by Pithora's sacred system: fulfilled vow, prepared white house-wall origin, Baba Pithora-centered ritual authority, and horse-led deity and ancestor imagery. Even though this is now a full world, it must still feel authored by the logic of the ritual mural.

Build the world so that horses remain sacred carriers of gods, goddesses, and ancestors, not naturalistic animals. The central deity field must still govern the world. Village-life motifs, agriculture, trees, birds, animals, sun, moon, and celebration may all appear, but only inside one sacred Pithora cosmos. The environment must feel like the full world implied by the ritual wall has opened out, while still remaining under the same symbolic order.

Retain the vivid mural energy: bright colors, clear symbolic bodies, strong sacred grouping, and white-ground logic translated into the wider environment. The world should feel like a believable dimensional extension of a Pithora wall, not a realistic scene with tribal motifs painted onto it.

Keep the ritual charge alive. The image must still feel like a world born from vow, deity presence, ancestor horses, and house-wall sacred intelligence. Every major element must belong to the same Pithora system.

Do not make it generic tribal fantasy. Do not make it secular rural realism. Do not naturalize the horses into ordinary animals. Do not let the sacred field dissolve into decorative atmosphere.

Reusable Variable Template

Create [SUBJECT / WORLD / SCENE] as a full 3D realistic dimensional world generated from Pithora painting of Gujarat.

Style system that must remain unchanged:

vow-fulfillment sacred identity

Baba Pithora-centered authority

horse-led deity and ancestor grammar

prepared white wall logic translated into world structure ritual mural energy and symbolic grouping village-life motifs as sacred support, not secular narrative whole-frame Pithora consistency

Translate the world like this:

[MAIN DEITY FIELD / MAIN HORSE WORLD] becomes a fully dimensional but still sacred Pithora-centered environment

[SECONDARY HORSES / DEITIES / ANCESTOR FIELDS] remain symbolic carriers inside the world

[SUPPORT MOTIFS / SUN / MOON / TREES / ANIMALS / FARMING / CELEBRATION] become environmental extensions of the same sacred system

[SPATIAL FIELD / ENVIRONMENT] becomes a believable dimensional world still governed by ritual mural intelligence rather than ordinary realism

Increase:

full spatial depth

environmental completion

world coherence
surface and environmental tactility sacred-cosmos integration

Do not lose:

vow-wall origin
horse sacredness
Baba Pithora hierarchy ritual symbolic reading
white-ground energy translated into the world
Pithora-specific visual order

Avoid:

generic tribal fantasy decorative mural realism ordinary village-life tableau
naturalistic horses
one sacred motif in an unrelated world

Image-to-Image

Convert this source image into a full 3D realistic Pithora world from Gujarat.

Preserve the source image's main composition, subject relationships, and readability, but rebuild the whole image through Pithora ritual-world grammar. Replace ordinary realism with a full dimensional world governed by Baba Pithora, sacred horses, ancestor presences, and the symbolic order of the vow-wall.

If the source contains horses, transform them into sacred carriers of gods, goddesses, and ancestors, not naturalistic animals. If it contains figures, make them part of the Pithora sacred cosmos rather than realism-first characters. If it contains village-life, farming, celebration, trees, birds, sun, moon, or animals, reorganize them as extensions of one ritual world.

Extend the white sacred-wall logic into the larger dimensional environment so the world still feels born from a prepared ritual field. Keep the mural's vivid symbolic energy, but now let it unfold as a full environment. The final result should feel like the entire world implied by a Pithora wall has become real without losing ritual meaning.

Do not turn it into generic tribal fantasy, decorative horse mural realism, or rural scene painting with sacred motifs added on top. Rebuild the full image so it feels authored by Pithora ritual-world grammar.
